It was on March 22nd that we abandoned our bomber over Germany proper about one hundred miles west of Berlin. It was 2:15 P.M. when I bailed out and was captured. Shortly after hitting the ground. Thus I joined The Catapillar Club. Our plane was badly damaged and aside from my other four crew members, it still remains a mystery to me what happened to the other five members remaining and the plane itself. I was captured by civilians and a few young German youth some 15 years old. We were then sent aboard a train and arrived at Dulag Luft on March 23rd at 6:00 P.M. There I was assigned a room 6x8 and remained there in solitary confinement for thirteen days. Dulag Luft is in Frankfurt, Germany and it is there you are sent so they can third degree you for information. Frankfurt, itself was in flames and a mass of wreckage when I went through it. While I was there the American P.O.W. camp outside of Frankfurt was badly damaged and luckily only one American killed. My daily food ration was two slices of buttered bread and a bowl of soup a day. Someday I had nothing to eat, to hear my mind that they were seeking information. I was interrogated three times and on April 5th. at 6:30 P.M. I was released from solitary and taken to a barbed wire enclosure with other airmen to await transportation to prison camp. The food was the same with the exception that if you cared for records on your ship it was all yours. In addition to this improvement the Russian prisoners who were stationed there permanently sent us two cigarettes per man a day. They were decidedly inferior to American cuts but tasted good after being without them for so long a time. April 9th. was eventful because at about 4: P.M. 100 Americans and yours truly arrived at Stalag XVII B in Austria after leaving Dulag Luft on April 6th. The trip, three days and three nights was in a cold hot car. Besides the meager Kery rations five men shared one 10 lb. Red Cross food parcel and enjoyed my first American cut since March 22nd. At our permanent prison we were de housed, had our hair cut off completely, and finally given a royal reception by the old Krieger as we had news from the outside world. All of this has truly been an experience, one which I shall never forget.
